Source stated that this was a newly constructed airfield. Source had lived [REDACTED] from this airfield and he had never seen or heard of any construction or flying activity, when suddenly, in April 1953, he observed many two engine jet bombers lowering for landings in this area (Source was unable to identify aircraft) both day and night. He also stated that jet aircraft engines were being run up continuously until the time [REDACTED]. At night large spotlights were directed into the air, and many flares were fired. These flares would light up an area of one kilometer in diameter. There was also a bombing and firing range in this area that the jet bombers would utilize. The bombs were light because explosions were small. [REDACTED] bombs being dropped and he estimated the weight of them at 10 kg. Source heard from [REDACTED] who had been near this area at one time, that he observed small wooden shacks on which the bombing practice had been done. The firing was done from the ground at gray balloons which would be released from aircraft and gradually float to the ground. Source stated that when the above activities started, he heard many people in Warsaw complaining about the noises of jet aircraft and bombs coming from this area and he often heard them say, "Why not drop the bombs in the Wisla River instead of endangering the safety of people in big cities." Source could offer no further information on this airfield.
